

Finished this interesting and most provocative book ... my favorites at this point are "Time and Again," "Vending Machine," "Franco," and "The House." Frankl is a master of juxtaposing the commonplace with the bizarre. The occult stories are too good at giving one a jolt of reality — unsought and unexpected. He is right about the short-short story, it is appropriate to our times. While Robert Frost paused to contemplate the road not taken, we (and the characters in this book) stumble along not realizing until uselessly late that our path has changed direction. Congratulations on this most unsettling book.
